TO THE WATERMELON.

Come to the mortal as he sits Under a dry-goods box and sips. The nector from thy juicy lips. Come to the youngster as he filts
Across the high and praked fonce
And moved with costacy intense
Thy charms from off thy native vine And then set torrible!

C August-born nonstresity! Beneath thy emerald besom glow. Like glittering bubbles in the wine, The lured fires of deadly woe, And from thy facinations grow

The pain, the cramp, the pang, the throe-And all we fear or dream or know Of agony is thine!
